

Contact:

Keeyana Hall

Keeyana.hall@thefreshxpress.com

937-631-1459

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The FreshXpress nominated for four Black Weblog Awards

Columbus, OH–August 4, 2009– The FreshXpress.com announced today that it has been nominated for four Black Weblog Awards in the categories of Best New Blog, Best Culture Blog, Best Group Blog and Blog to Watch.

The Black Weblog Awards were created in 2005 to celebrate black blogs and bloggers and has evolved from 11 categories to 30.

The FreshXpress.com has been around for a little more than six months, and has already acquired substantial buzz on the Internet. Being nominated in these four categories is an added bonus.

“We haven’t been around that long and we’re already nominated for four categories. This is definitely an honor. I’m just amazed,” Sean Walton, founder and CEO of the FreshXpress.com, said.

The founders of the site are also excited because some of the FreshXpress’s contributors are also nominated for awards.

“This proves that we have a site full of talent. We wouldn’t be where we are without our contributors, so it only makes sense that some of them are nominated as well. I’m proud of them all,” Walton said.

Voting is open from August 1-31, with the winner being announced September 4. To place a vote, visit www.vote.blackweblogawards.com/pick.

For more information about the FreshXpress, visit www.thefreshxpress.com.

###

TheFreshXpress.com, dubbed “THE pulse of young Black America,” is a collection of free thinkers and individuals that have come together to give voice to a nation of young African Americans. It is our mission to provide fresh thought, fresh perspectives, and fresh debate on issues relevant to the African American community.

TheFreshXpress.com was founded by Sean L. Walton Jr., Arlen Herrell and Kevin Breckenridge.